The Wealth of Cuba.

If Uncle Sam should, in the interest of humanity, add Cuba to his domains. It would almost double his wealth. With Cuba under a stable government and fully cultivated, Uncle Sam would soon control the world's markets for four great staples—tobacco, sugar, coffee and rice. It seems a shame to abandon this rich island to an allen race. It is a greater shame for a man to abandon his stomach to the ravages of disease. To strengthen the stomach take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is just the thing to stimulate the appetite. It will overcome dyspepsia. If there is constipation it will establish regularity of the bowels. It makes the narves of the bowels. It makes the nerves strong and steady, and gives restful slumber. There is no substitute for it.

Hoarseness in a child that is subject to croup is a sure indication of the approach of the disease. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough has appeared, it will prevent the attack. Many mothers who have croupy children always keep this remedy at hand and find that it saves them much trouble and worry. It can always be depended upon and is pleasant to take. For sale by A. C. BONES OF COLUMBUS

A STORY CONCERNING THEIR PLACE OF BURIAL.

Interesting Data Intending to Show That the Explorer's Remains Are Still in Santo Domingo-Some Documentary Evidence In Berlin.

Apropos of the removal of the supposed remains of Christopher Columbus from the cathedral in Havana to some other place of deposit in Spain and of the existing doubts about the identity of the remains, the following account of the facts of the case will be of interest:

Columbus expressed his desire to be buried in "La Espanola" (Santo Domingo) in his testament, and the story of his wife carrying the lifeless body of her husband with her wherever she went is contradicted by the church records in Valladolid. The admiral, as Columbus was called by his friends and relatives, was too poor when he died to allow of his desire being carried out, and his body was decently buried. He died on May 21, 1506, without the least suspicion that he had discovered a new continent, firmly persuaded that he had reached the easternmost shores of Asia. Forty years later, when the conquests of Cortes and Pizarro flooded the peninsula with the gold and silver of Mexico and Peru, Spain remembered the almost forgotten name of the man to whom it owed the rich possessions, and it became proud of him. Complying with his dying wish, the government ordered his remains to be conveyed to Santo Domingo to be interred in the cathedral. This was done in 1541. At that time the edifice had just been finished. No records were kept as yet, but the tradition remained that the body rested to the right of the altar. This tradition was entered in the church register 185 years later—that is, in 1676.

In the beginning of the seventeenth century the remains of the discoverer's brother, Diego, who had been governor of Santo Domingo, together with those of his son Louis, were also transferred to the island and buried in the same cathedral. There was no inscription indicating the locality of either vault. Santo Domingo was ceded to France by the treaty of Basel (December, 1795), and the Spaniards stipulated that the remains of the discoverer should be removed to Cuba. Accordingly the floor on the right of the altar was open and the contents of the vault found were transferred to Havana with great

But in 1877 some workmen, repairing the floor, discovered another vault, also on the right of the altar, between that from which the supposed remains of Christopher Columbus had been taken and the outer wall of the chancel, the two vaults being separated only by a thin wall. This vault was found to contain a small leaden box, 44 centimeters long, 23 centimeters high and 211/2 centimeters broad, with an inscription that convinced the authorities and everybody who saw it that the contents were unmistakably the remains of "the admiral," and that those of his brother Diego had been taken to Havana.

The Spanish authorities stoutly denied that any mistake could have been made. The archbishop of Santo Domingo as firmly maintained that the remains discovered by the workmen were those of Christopher Columbus, and a long controversy on the subject took place, till the matter dropped, remaining in

But in January, 1891, Mr. Rudolf Cronau, author of "Amerika, die Geschichte seiner Entdeckung von der Al-tersten bis auf die Neuester Zeit' (Leipsic), came to Santo Domingo, for the pur poses of his book, to personally investigate. He brought an introduction from Prince Bismarck to the president of Santo Domingo and was permitted to reopen the vault in the presence of the church dignitaries, of the secretary of state for the interior, of the consuls of all the governments represented in Santo Domingo and of other persons of note. The result was that ther, could be no longer any doubt that the remains of Columbus were still in the cathedral of his beloved Hispaniola.

A document to that effect was drawn up on the spot and signed by every one present, the original of which is in the Berlin foreign office, and if any doubt remains in the minds of our readers regarding the authenticity of the circumstances related they may read the report of the proceedings by President Charles K. Adams of Cornell university in the American Historical society's annual report for 1891.—R. A. Van Middledyk in New York Herald:

of the Latest Style.

For bodices, which do not follow the coat model now again become fashionable, the blouse front is still retained, and the bodice is often opened over a plastron or yoke of a dark color. Brandebourgs connecting the two sides of the front of a corsage or crossing slashes are much employed and are held in place by motifs of passementerie or ornamental buttons. folds and pullings, they are still largely used for surrounding yokes, heading ruffles and similar purposes.

Boas and ruches, which have been worn all summer, naturally receive a fresh impetus in favor as cold weather approaches.

CALLING COSTUME.

Feathers, gauze and mousseline de soie are, as usual, the materials of which they are composed, and some new ones are seen of very heavy, silk net with large chenille dots. Black and white no longer share with gray the front rank to the exclusion of everything else. Pink, blue, cream, straw and pale green, alone or with black, are seen among the most exclusive and special novelties.

A new linen collar for wear with flan-nel and silk shirt waists during the winter is like the plain, high ones worn in the past summer except that the front corners are very much rounded away.

The picture illustrates a new model of a calling costume. The skirt, of tilleul cloth, is bordered with deep black em-broidery and has a slight trail. The half length coat of black velours du nord is perfectly tight and plain, crossed in front and very much cut away below the waist. It is edged with a band of jet and steel spangled galloon and fastens with four large jeweled buttons. There is a high valois collar. The toque of black velvet is trimmed with a black velvet Louis Quinze bow, a jeweled ornament and black feathers. JUDIC CHOLLET.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Decoration and Finish of This Sea son's Wraps and Costumes.

The basques of short coat bodices are the sport of fashion this winter, and it is there that the greatest variety is found. They are round, square, cut in all sorts of odd shapes or sometimes double, of different materials or colors, and finally they some times consist of separate detached points or scallops in which cloth and velvet alter-

A mode much favored some years ago is revived after long eclipse—that is, the use of many little straps or tabs fastened by decorative buttons. These are used on cloth jackets and capes to secure the gar-ment at the throat and waist, to hold the revers in place or to attach one part to an-other as well as to ornament the pockets, cuffs and collar. A new use of this style of trimming is to interweave ribbons in it. For example, at each side of the plastron or the tablier is placed a series of little straps of cloth, held at each end by a button, and a ribbon of velvet or satin is run through them. This species of decoration is seen on tailor made and other woolen gowns.

The lining of jackets, coats and capes and the facing of revers and collars become more and more rich. The ne plus ultra of elegance now is a plain cloth gown lined with a fine quality of plain or fancy silk which forms a striking contrast in color. White satin and straw silk are much employed for lining costumes of a dark shade—plum, dark red, Russian green, etc. A petticoat matching the lining is the appropriate accompaniment.

The cape shown in the illustration is black velours du nord and is trimmed with four circular ruffies of beige faille embroidered with black and steel. The valois collar is of the velvet. A black satin ribbon outlines a capuchon and is tied in front with long ends. The hat of gray felt is trimmed with gray plumes and gray ribbon.
